The problem

- The Indian Constitution has 448 articles but most citizens know less than 5.
- Most Indians don't know their fundamental rights or basic constitutional laws as a result they can't exercise them or protect themselves.
- Existing awareness methods like textbooks, lectures, are passive and forgettable.
- Youth especially disconnect from legal literacy. Students memorize for exams, forget within weeks

Our Solution

- NyayaPlay – an interactive game application designed to deliver constitutional literacy to users through gameplay.
- Two mini-games that progressively build knowledge of Indian laws, articles, and citizen right.
- It targets the audience with basic to zero awareness about the constitution.
- Deployable as a standalone web/mobile application or integrated into existing school digital infrastructure.
- Bridges the gap between constitutional education and the way today's generation actually learns.

Game 1: Pipeline to Justice

- Screen is divided into three sections:
 - Left panel - displays the Article number or Law name
 - Center panel - scrambled, rotatable pipe segments forming an unsolved puzzle
 - Right panel - displays the corresponding meaning, shuffled out of order.
 - Final score displayed - number of correct vs incorrect matches.
 - Pipe positions and question sets are randomized each session.
- Learning outcome: Players learn the article name, article numbers, their meanings, and understand common misinterpretations.

Game 2: Snakes and Ladders

- Any number of players on one device (pass and play) or multiplayer
 - Before every move: player gets a constitutional question
 - Answer correct → they pick their step (1 to 6) - strategic advantage
 - Answer wrong → dice is rolled randomly for them - no control
 - Even losing teaches the player something.
- Land on a Ladder: Screen shows a Fundamental Right or citizen entitlement
 - Example: "Article 21 — Right to life and personal liberty cannot be taken away except by law"
 - Land on a Snake: Screen shows a crime/punishment law
 - Example: "Article 17 — Untouchability is abolished and its practice is a punishable offence"

Impact

- Active recall - answering questions is proven to retain information longer than reading.
- Consequence-based learning - snake = bad law violated, ladder = right earned.
- Multiplayer pressure - competing with friends increases attention and motivation.
- Immediate correction - wrong answers are explained on the spot, not ignored.
- Replayability - question bank rotates, so every game session is different.
- Zero prerequisite - no legal background needed to start playing.
